(解答例)

I will do an “information gap” activity. I will give students English advertisements and brochures, and have them work in pairs to read necessary information. I’ll have them ask their partner what he/she wants to know about to decide what is necessary to read. It is important to note that instead of trying to read everything that is written in the advertisement or brochure, students should think about what information they need to pick up. By asking questions to their partner, I would expect that they have to improvise their conversation in accordance with their purpose. Also, they have to understand the contents correctly in order to meet their partner’s need. (111 words)
