No, I don't think junior high school students should learn another foreign language besides English. Learning English is already very challenging for most students at this age. They need to master grammar, vocabulary, pronunciation, and communication skills, which require a lot of time and effort. And learning another language would be too stressful for students. They already study many subjects. If they try to learn two foreign languages, they may not be able to focus well on either and have trouble learning both languages. In addition, English is a global language. Students can access international information, connect with people worldwide, and prepare for future opportunities. These are big advantages. For these reasons, just learning English is enough for junior high school students.
