Last spring, I visited my uncle living in Tokyo. He took me to the street near a station. There are cherry trees planted along the street. When I visited the street, many local people were enjoying the beautiful cherry blossoms there. My uncle said that they look forward to seeing the blossoms every spring. According to my uncle, cherry trees were planted along the street when the area around the street was developed about a hundred years ago. The oldest tree is one of the cherry trees planted then. The cherry trees along the street are a symbol of the area. However, some of the trees became weak when they got old. So, to keep the cherry trees in good condition, local people are taking care of them together. I thought everyone can enjoy beautiful blossoms thanks to their effort.

Daniel: Hi, Yuri. Your speech was interesting. I'd like to go to that street in Tokyo to enjoy the cherry blossoms. I imagine they are beautiful.

Yuri: They are so beautiful! But some of the trees didn't have many blossoms. My uncle told me those trees are weak. Local people including my uncle help those weak trees.

Daniel: I see. I guess taking care of weak cherry trees is difficult.

Yuri: I heard it is not easy. To help the trees, local people get professional advice from a tree doctor.

Daniel: I heard the phrase, "a tree doctor," for the first time. Is the person a doctor for trees?

Yuri: Yes, tree doctors have professional knowledge about taking care of trees.

Daniel: I see. Please tell me what local people and the tree doctor actually do for the cherry trees.

Yuri: Sure! According to my uncle, local people and the tree doctor carefully check the cherry trees every year. After checking the trees together, the tree doctor judges which ones need a treatment.

Daniel: What treatment do weak trees receive?

Yuri: For example, weak trees receive a treatment for helping new roots grow. Weak trees may fall down if they are left without the treatment. With the new roots, the trees can support themselves. Also, they can get more nutrients with the new roots.

Daniel: So, weak trees get stronger by the treatment, right?

Yuri: Yes, they get stronger if the treatment is successful. After a while, local people check the trees with the tree doctor and see how the treatment goes.

Daniel: I see. I hope trees which are weak now will get stronger by the treatment.

Yuri: I hope so, too. But sometimes the treatment doesn't go well. Actually, one weak tree didn't get better though it received the treatment. The tree doctor judged the tree should be cut down.

Daniel: Oh, I think it was very hard ① to accept that.

Yuri: I think so, too. The tree was cut down before a typhoon came close to the area. The tree doctor worried the weak tree might fall down because of the strong winds and hurt someone. And local people understood his worry.

Daniel: You mean they had to cut down the tree because ②, right?

Yuri: That's right.

Daniel: Now I understand that taking care of weak cherry trees is not easy. And I'm sure that the cherry trees are very special to local people.

Yuri: You are right! The cherry trees became special to me, too. When I visit my uncle next time, I'm going to see how the cherry trees are.

Daniel: That's a good idea. I will visit that street someday to enjoy the cherry trees. Thank you for telling me about the cherry trees along that street, Yuri.

Yuri: You are welcome.

Last summer, I went to Kumamoto Prefecture in the Kyushu area with my family. There, we visited a park near the sea. My family told me that the sea ① from the park is famous as a place for cultivating nori, a kind of seaweed. In the park, I found a monument about a scientist in the U.K. It ② show people's thanks to the scientist. It says her research played an important role when people in Japan tried to improve the way of cultivating nori. I didn't know how nori is cultivated and I didn't know about the scientist, either. I did research and I will talk about the things I learned.

In Japan, people started to cultivate nori in the Edo period. In those days, people made fences and set them in the sea to keep fish in one place. One day, people found that nori grew on those fences. ③ Though people were successful in cultivating nori, there was a problem. The amount of nori people could get was not stable. In one year, people could get a lot of nori. In another year, people could get only a small amount of nori. ④ People didn't know well about nori. They especially didn't know how nori was born and grew before they found it on the sticks. Nori was found in winter, but people couldn't find it in summer. People just hoped a lot of nori would grow on the sticks in winter. This situation continued until the middle of the 20th century.

In the late 1940's, a scientist in the U.K. found important things which helped people in Japan improve the situation. The scientist's name was Kathleen Drew-Baker. She was doing research on one kind of seaweed which was very similar to nori. Though the kind of seaweed was found in winter, it wasn't found in summer. ア She worked hard and finally found the answer for her question. She found that, in summer, it grew on seashells and looked very different. イ It looked so different in summer that, for a long time, scientists didn't know that the thing which grew on seashells in summer and the kind of seaweed they found in winter were the same kind of seaweed. ウ She then sent a letter about her research to a Japanese scientist she knew. エ He was studying seaweed in the Kyushu area. In the letter, she told him that nori in Japan might also grow on seashells in summer. He shared her research with other people and they started their challenge of cultivating nori by using seashells. Several years later, it was successful and finally ⑤. Then, people were able to cultivate a stable amount of nori.

The monument of Kathleen Drew-Baker is a sign of people's thanks to her. She never visited Japan, but her research greatly helped people improve the way of cultivating nori. And, that led us to enjoy various dishes using nori in our everyday lives. The things I learned about nori helped me realize that our lives are supported by many people.
